Not illustrated. 1920 Excerpt: ... face of the earth. The man who cannot subscribe to that doctrine--and that doctrine is the very essence of the creed of California's son,--is not fit to be an American. (Applause.) My fellow Americans, the hour has struck, the time has come to scourge the last of the bosses from this great temple of the Republican party. Men of the South, if it be true that there are among your number hand-picked delegates who have forgotten the obligation they of all men owe to the flag of freedom; men of the North, if it be true that there are in your ranks political slaves who, are being lashed into line by the blacksnake of some party Legree, tell them that they hold within themselves the power to strike the shackles from their own limbs. Say to them that the future of the institutions of our common country is here involved; that they with us are the custodians of a sacred trust which rises transcendent over any obligation that any man has ever owed to any political boss who has ever attempted to dominate the conscience of a delegate to a Republican National Convention. Tell that delegate, wherever you may find him, to sink a shaft to the bedrock of his being, down to the rich black sands of his soul where the golden grains of self-respect and patriotism are found in every decent man, then bid him to arise to the full height of his manhood and shout the slogan till these rafters ring: "A Republican and a free man, I came into this Convention; and by the grace of God, a Republican and a free man, I shall go forth from it." (Applause.) Men and women of the Convention, the great responsibility is yours. The American voter everywhere is saying of California's son just as Roosevelt said of him,--, "Of all the public men in this country today, he is the one wi...
