Memoirs of the Walking Dead: A Story from the Zombie's Point of View Jason McKinney

Boy and cat lead dull lives. Boy goes to club, gets sick and dies. His cat dies too. That sucks. Boy and cat wake up dead. Zombie boy meets zombie girl. Zombie cat likes zombie girl. Zombies break up and boy joins the Army. Now unlife is even more interesting. Meet Paul Rierson. He's a zombie; though don't let that fool you—Paul's got a pretty big heart considering he doesn't have a working one. And though he's new to the whole un-dead experience, there's no doubt he's a pretty thoughtful guy. Sure he craves the taste of living flesh, and there's that whole being hunted on a daily basis thing—zombie-life is no walk in the park—but when Paul meets Tracey Dobbs, a fellow newbie to the un-dead life, he's smitten. He also comes to realize that in matters of life and death, perhaps being alive is not all it's cracked up to be. Oh, and one more thing—dead people rule!
